HR&A Advisors
Inclusive Cities Practice
New York, NY / Washington, D.C.

Dear Selection Committee,

I am writing to express my strong interest in the Analyst position in HR&A Advisors' Inclusive Cities practice. HR&A's belief that cities can be engines of shared prosperity, and that racial and economic equity should be designed into public policy rather than added at the end, matches the reason I chose to study Justice and Peace at Georgetown. I am especially drawn to the practice's work helping newly elected leaders build their agendas, because that moment of transition is when good research and honest analysis can shape how a government serves people for years.

My path into policy began with people rather than papers. As a casework intern at the International Rescue Committee, I helped refugee families navigate housing, health care, and benefits systems that were rarely designed with them in mind, and I saw how a single confusing rule could stall a family's progress for months. That experience taught me to listen carefully to the people a policy is meant to serve and to ask who is missing from the conversation, a habit I bring to every stakeholder interview and research question.

At Holland & Knight, I research legislation and regulation across many issue areas and write memos and briefings for attorneys and former Members of Congress. The work has trained me to synthesize a large body of material into a clear argument, to write first drafts that senior colleagues can build on, and to map which committees, officials, and groups actually hold influence over an issue before a client meeting. Interning in Representative DeGette's office showed me how local concerns travel up to federal decision-makers, and how much elected officials rely on staff who can turn messy information into practical options. I use AI tools to work faster, always verifying against primary sources.

I would be excited to support HR&A's project teams with research, budget and policy analysis, power mapping, and client-ready deliverables, and to grow into a consultant who helps cities make bold, equitable choices. Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to the opportunity to discuss how I could contribute to your team.

Sincerely,
Adeline Bean
