Raymond James
Washington Policy Research
Arlington, VA

Dear Selection Committee,

I am writing to express my strong interest in the Research Associate position on Raymond James's Washington Policy team. Investors need to know not just what Washington is debating, but how likely a proposal is to move and what it would actually change. Helping answer those questions carefully, and without letting my own views tilt the analysis, is the kind of work I want to build my career around.

At Holland & Knight, I have learned that good policy analysis starts with the underlying text and the surrounding record, not the headline. When I track hearings, markups, and new bills for the firm's National Security & Defense sector group, my job is to separate what is likely to happen from what is just noise, and to explain it to people who have to act on it. Working in Representative DeGette's office showed me how legislation really moves: through committee staff, competing priorities, and timing, which is exactly the judgment your clients rely on.

I am especially drawn to this role's focus on geopolitics, defense, trade, supply chains, and energy, the areas I have followed most closely in my internships. My time at a member-owned credit union has also given me respect for how policy shows up in real financial decisions. I am new to equity markets and would approach the market side the way I approach any technical subject: by learning from the senior analysts around me and checking my work closely.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I would be excited to help Raymond James's clients understand what Washington's decisions mean for them, and I look forward to the opportunity to discuss how I could contribute to your team.

Sincerely,
Adeline Bean
