Climate Leadership Council
Government Relations
Washington, D.C.

Dear Selection Committee,

I am writing to express my strong interest in the Senior Government Relations Associate position at the Climate Leadership Council. The questions the Council is bringing to Capitol Hill, how to secure critical mineral supply chains, how trade policy can reward cleaner American production, and how to meet surging electricity demand from AI and data centers, are among the most important economic and climate questions of this decade. I am drawn to the Council's bipartisan, market-oriented approach and to a role that carries rigorous research into real relationships with congressional offices.

At Holland & Knight, I track federal energy, critical minerals, trade, manufacturing, and infrastructure legislation and agency actions, and I write memos and readouts that tell attorneys and policy advisors what changed and what to watch next. Supporting the co-leads of the firm's National Security and Defense industry sector group has deepened my understanding of supply chain and industrial-base concerns, which overlap closely with the Council's critical minerals work. Preparing talking points and background materials before meetings with congressional offices and agencies has taught me how a short, credible briefing helps staff who are balancing dozens of issues at once.

My time in Representative DeGette's office showed me government relations from the other side of the table. I researched energy and environment legislation, attended hearings and markups, and sat in on meetings with constituents, companies, and advocates. I noticed that staff relied most on the visitors who were prepared, honest about tradeoffs, and willing to follow up, regardless of party. That is the kind of relationship builder I want to become. As co-founder of Georgetown's Undergraduate Law Journal, I also learned to coordinate many moving pieces and keep a team on schedule, which I would bring to Hill briefings, convenings, and the team's logistics.

I would be excited to build relationships with an assigned portfolio of offices, track and anticipate legislative developments, deliver timely readouts, support briefings and convenings, and work closely with the policy and communications teams. Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to the opportunity to discuss how I could contribute to your team.

Sincerely,
Adeline Bean
