Adyen
Compliance, Oversight
Chicago, IL

Dear Selection Committee,

I am writing to express my strong interest in the Compliance Officer, Oversight position at Adyen in Chicago. Adyen's ability to serve global businesses depends on compliance programs that are both rigorous and practical, and I am drawn to oversight work because it asks a simple but demanding question: are the controls actually working as designed? I would love to begin my career helping a fast-growing payments company answer that question honestly and improve its processes as it scales.

My interest in financial compliance began behind the counter at Georgetown's student-run credit union. Working as a teller at a fully operational financial institution taught me that controls exist for real reasons: verifying identity, following procedures exactly, and escalating anything unusual with clear context protects both members and the institution. I also learned that the best explanation of a rule is a plain one, and I try to give members and colleagues the reason behind a procedure, not just the instruction. That experience is why I see quality assurance testing not as a box-checking exercise but as a way to find where a process quietly breaks down before it harms a customer.

My policy internships have taught me the regulatory side of the same picture. At Holland & Knight, I research legislative, regulatory, and enforcement developments in financial services, banking, and payments and turn them into concise briefings for attorneys and former Members of Congress. Co-authoring client alerts has shown me how to explain new obligations to business audiences, a skill I would bring to quarterly reporting and training. In Representative DeGette's office, I documented casework carefully and followed each matter until it was resolved. I use AI tools to work efficiently while always validating the results.

I would be excited to contribute to Adyen's compliance oversight program, partner with first-line teams on remediation, and grow within a team that values ownership and international perspectives. Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to the opportunity to discuss how I could contribute to your team.

Sincerely,
Adeline Bean
