Invenergy
Corporate Affairs, Regional Communications
Chicago, IL

Dear Selection Committee,

I am writing to express my strong interest in the Analyst, Regional Communications position at Invenergy in Chicago. Building power infrastructure depends on earning the trust of the communities that host it, and I am drawn to a role whose purpose is to explain energy projects honestly and clearly to the people who live alongside them. Invenergy's range of technologies, from natural gas and wind to solar, storage, and transmission, makes it an ideal place to learn how energy actually gets built in America.

My interest in energy communication grew out of my policy work. At Holland & Knight, I follow energy, infrastructure, and national security developments in Congress and federal agencies, and I have learned that the hardest part is rarely the research; it is translating dense technical and regulatory material into language a busy reader can act on. Co-authoring client alerts with partners taught me to write concisely, take edits gracefully, and move a draft through several reviewers without losing its message or its deadline. I approach every piece by asking who will read it and what they most need to understand, and I enjoy finding the human story inside a technical project.

I have also learned to speak to the public directly. In Representative DeGette's office, I answered constituents and drafted correspondence on federal issues, including energy and the environment, where a clear and respectful explanation mattered as much as the facts. At Georgetown's student-run credit union, I create marketing and education content for members, and as co-founder and executive editor of Georgetown's Undergraduate Law Journal, I manage publication timelines and a team of volunteer writers. I use AI tools to work faster but always check every claim against the source.

I would be excited to help Invenergy's regional communications team tell the story of each project accurately and to support the Development, Construction, and Government Affairs teams who depend on that story. Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to the opportunity to discuss how I could contribute to your team.

Sincerely,
Adeline Bean
